JUDGE DIVVER RILED.

Anthony Comstock Said His Court Was Not to Be Trusted.The Row Precipitated by an Exhibit in the Blakely Case.The Vice-Suppressor A'raid "The Girl from Long Branch"
Would Be Stolen.There was a lively time in the Tombs Police Court this morning when the case of John Blakely, the cigar dealer of 233 Broadway, was called.Blakely was arrested late yesterday afternoon on a warrant issued by Judge Divver, charging him with having in his possession and distributing obscene literature.When Justice Divver had finished reading the complaint he asked to be shown the literature on the strength of which the warrant had been issued for Blakely's arrest."I want to make that a part of the complaint by attaching it to the papers in the case as an exhibit," explained his lawyer."I most respectfully but firmly decline to do so," said Mr. Comstock.The Court looked surprised and asked: "Do you think it will contaminate me?""Let the Judge look at it through smoked glasses," suggested Lawyer James W. Mc-Laughlin, who represented Blakely."Well look away, not to see the Judge's blushes," volunteered one of the court officials."No, no," protested Mr. Comstock. "That is not the ground on which I refuse to surrender this literature." Then he said something which took away the breath of every individual in the court-room."I cannot trust this court," gasped Justice Divver, and he repeated the words three or four times, as if in a vain attempt to fasten their meaning in his mind."Do you mean, sir," he finally thundered, "to insinuate, sir, that I am not to be trusted with the keeping of these papers?""Oh, I do not mean to cast any aspersions upon your Honor," blandly replied the sup-pressor of Vice. "I would trust your Honor blindly, but I do not trust the Court.""Well, I'm the Court," retorted the Justice, with a gesture strongly suggestive of Justice XIV, when he said, "Letat cest moi!" (That is, it is I.)"But me no buts, sir," shouted the Justice with a rising inflection, while his collar threatened to burst. "You have insinuated that I would—"

"Allow me to—"

"Where for? We're done. Hereafter go elsewhere for your warrants. You have grossly insulted!"

"Will your Honor permit me to—"

"I'll permit nothing. I want that exhibit attached to the papers or I'll fire the case out of court.""Then, sir," said Anthony, whose imperturbability beginning to succumb to the Justice's determination not to let him explain—then, sir, I'll go to the Supreme Court."

"I'll go to the Court of Appeals."

"I'll go to—"

"You may go wherever you please," retorted the Justice, "but I insist upon running this court in the way the law allows me."

"That exhibit goes on or the case goes off."

"That's just what I wanted to explain," ejaculated Mr. Comstock. "I merely meant that I could not trust the officers of the court. Not so very long ago a Sergeant, who has since been transferred, permitted exhibits placed in his custody to go out of his hands. They were never recovered, and the case upon which they had a bearing was, of course, dismissed.""No, sir," growled Justice Divver, not to be placated, "you clearly meant me!""But I most solemnly protest that I did not," retorted Anthony. "I have been in the obscene-literature-prosecuting business for the last twenty years, and have known innumerable cases to be lost because the documentary evidence which had been left with the court was abstracted."The difference between Justice Divver and Mr. Comstock were finally patched up by Mr.
Comstock's consenting to allow the exhibit to be annexed to the complaint, and by his unmistakable sincere protestations that he entertained the utmost respect for Justice Div-ver.The literature which had caused all the trouble was a printed letter headed "The Girl from Long Branch," which Blakely yesterday gave Agent Oram, of the Comstock society, after a purchase of a box of cigars.Armed with a warrant of arrest and search warrant, Mr. Comstock, Detective O'Connor, of the Tombs, and a police officer broke open Mr. Blakely's desks and discovered 1,200 pages, forty-two pictures of alleged obscene character, one book, three cigar-holders and three ivory figures, any one of which numerous articles would be sufficient, Mr. Comstock claims, to make a clear running stream turn round.Blakely was placed under $500 bail for his examination adjourned until next Wednesday afternoon.As Mr. Comstock had made it a condition of his surrender of the exhibit that it should not be shown to reporters, the Justice caused it to be firmly sealed in an envelope with Mr.
Comstock's name written across the seal.While fixing up the bail in Sgt. Langh's

BEFORE THE CAMERA.

Cleveland and Stevenson Have Their Pictures Taken.Mr. Cleveland Will Start for Gray Gables To-Night.Gen. Stevenson Delighted with Eastern Hospitality, but Tired Out.Democratic Standard-Bearers Cleveland and Stevenson have been so greatly pleased with their visit to New York that they concluded today to perpetuate the memory of it by having their pictures taken.The arrangements for the undertaking were made as carefully as if the twain were a couple of lovers at Coney Island.Mr. Cleveland, notwithstanding the exhaustion of the last two days, was up bright and early and had read the morning papers before ex-Secretary Whitney was sufficiently awake to remember he had a guest in the house. When the latter came down stairs, he had scarcely greeted the ex-President when he was asked:"Say, Whitney, will this Gray Gables surround on my face spoil a picture?"Mr. Whitney thought it wouldn't, and at Mr. Cleveland's request called up Mr. Stevenson on the telephone to find out when it would be convenient for the candidates to visit several photographic studios together.Mr. Stevenson suggested starting at 11 o'clock, and at that hour Mr. Cleveland, in Mr. Whitney's private carriage, called for the vice-presidential candidate at the Hoffman House. The two went to Kew-Forest, and afterwards to Saul's, Moros's and Paul's.Both gentlemen were dressed in black frock coats, which were buttoned closely while they were sitting before the camera. They submitted to such commands as "look pleasant now" without a grumble, and both did look as pleasant as the smiling heat would permit.One artist, instead of telling his subjects to look pleasant, asked them to think of the notification meeting. The effect was nearer instantaneous than the camera, and the artist had to wait a few seconds before the candidates stopped smiling.The ex-President said this morning he would probably start back to Gray Gables this evening. Mr. Cleveland, who is still at Greenwich, will go to Mr. Whitney's residence this afternoon and return with her husband.The trip will be made by water and Gray Gables will be reached to-morrow morning.
Mr. Stevenson stated this morning that he would start home over the New York Central Railroad to-morrow morning.He has been considerably fatigued by the excitement of the last two days, and will take a rest with his family."I have been greatly pleased with my trip to New York," he said to an EVENING WORLD reporter this morning."The reception could not have been more hearty. Some folks in the West think Eastern people are not hospitable, but I will tell them otherwise when I go back.""What arrangements have you and Mr.
Cleveland made for the campaign?""None whatever. I will return to my home without any engagements ahead, and as far as I know Mr. Cleveland will do the same. I will probably make a number of speeches in Illinois, and I am confident the State will swing into the Democratic column."Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland Going to the Adirondacks.
